

POLICE SERGEANT

NATURE OF WORK

This is supervisory or specialized police work in the field or office.

Work involves responsibility for assisting in the supervision of department personnel from various units, for performing administrative tasks, and for carrying out investigative duties, all which require the use of specialized knowledge and skills. Work is usually performed on an assigned shift and may involve an element of personal danger. Employees may participate in the work performed by subordinate officers and act for superiors in their absence. Supervision is exercised over officers in a designated team or unit. Employees are given specific work instructions by superior officers on new assignments, but work independently in performing regularly assigned duties. Work is reviewed by a superior officer through written documents, personal conferences, and observation.
